Throughout Japanese history, even today, the head of the ruling government has been an emperor. The emperor is always a member of the Yamato family, but the emperor's real power in the government was different depending on the time period in Japanese history.

From the late 12th to the late 19th century, Japan was ruled by a series of shoguns. Shoguns were military leaders in Japan who had absolute power and passed their power down through their families. A government ruled by a shogun was called a shogunate. During the period when Japan was ruled by shogunates, there was still an emperor from the Yamato family, but he had little power.

The Shoguns created a hierarchy in Japanese government and society called feudalism. Feudalism is a decentralized system of power in which land owned by a powerful person is divided up and given to others in exchange for work and a promise to fight for the interests of the land owner.

Feudalism existed in Europe during the Middle Ages in which kings divided up their land and gave them to lords to rule in exchange for loyalty to the king and protection if the king needed it. These lords gave land to knights who promised to protect the lords in exchange.

In Japan, the system was similar but the roles had different names. The shogun ruled Japan and the daimyo were the wealthy landowners who promised their loyalty to the shogun. The daimyo gave land to samurai in exchange for their loyalty and protection. Below the samurai were peasants, merchants, and artisans.

How did the Tokugawa Shogunate gain, consolidate, and maintain power in Japan?

➡ Directions: As you read through the following documents take notes in the graphic organizer below about the strategies that the Tokugawa Shogunate used to gain, consolidate, and maintain power in Japan.

Tokugawa Shogunate (n.) the government that ruled Japan (1600-1868)

After the fall of the Ashikaga Shogunate in 1573, rival daimyo fought for control of Japan. Tokugawa Ieyasu defeated his rivals and was granted the title of shogun by the emperor. He started a shogunate that lasted for over 250 years.

Document 1a

The Tokugawa shogunate realized the importance of maintaining contact with distant provinces within Japan. The Tōkaidō was its most important highway.

...Perhaps the most crucial use of the road was for governmental communication with the provinces. Official messengers traveled by foot, horseback (in wartime), and palanquin [a seat, usually for the wealthy, carried by other people]. The government used a system of relays for messengers, with reliefs at every seven li [3.9 km]. Government messengers had priority over any other type of traveler. They had first access to ferries at river crossings along the way, and could freely pass government road barriers at all times of the day or night. Private citizens were not allowed to travel at night; a series of barriers and checkpoints along the road kept them from doing so....

Relay Station: Hōeidō #53

...Here, a man is riding in a "fast palanquin," gripping a strap for fear of falling off. The bearers of these palanquins would change at the relay stations, but the rider transmitting the message would endure the grueling ride until he reached his destination and could transmit his secret message in person.

The Edicts of Toyotomi Hideyoshi: Excerpts from Collection of Swords

The following excerpts come from a powerful daimyo who ruled before the Tokugawa Shogunate named Toyotomi Hideyoshi. Both Tokugawa Ieyasu and Toyotomi Hideyoshi fought for a previous powerful daimyo who tried to unite Japan named Oda Nobunaga. Though Ieyasu and Hideyoshi competed for power later, Ieyasu continued some of his policies like the one below.

Document 4: Laws Governing Military Households (1615), Excerpts

By 1603, Tokugawa Ieyasu had won the civil war and had become the supreme ruler of Japan, the Shogun. His successor, Shogun Hidetada, put forth laws for military households. These households included members of the warrior class: the daimyo, the greater samurai, and the lesser samurai.

. . . [4] Great lords (daimyō), the lesser lords, and officials should immediately expel from their domains any among their retainers [vassals] or henchmen who have been charged with treason or murder. . . .

[6] Whenever it is intended to make repairs on a castle of one of the feudal domains, the [shogunate] authorities should be notified. The construction of any new castles is to be halted and stringently [strictly] prohibited. "Big castles are a danger to the state." Walls and moats are the cause of great disorders.

[7] Immediate report should be made of innovations which are being planned or of factional conspiracies [schemes by dissenting groups] being formed in neighboring domains. . . .

Document 5

The sankin kotai or hostage system was included as part of the warrior class laws.

Alternate residence duty, or sankin kotai, was a system developed in the Warring States period and perfected by the Tokugawa shogunate. In essence, the system demanded simply that daimyo reside in the Tokugawa castle at Edo for periods of time, alternating with residence at the daimyo's own castle. When a daimyo was not residing in the Tokugawa castle, he was required to leave his family at his overlord's [shogun's] castle town. It was, at its simplest, a hostage system which required that either the daimyo or his family (including the very important heir) always be physically subject to the whim of the overlord. . . .
